Summary

This book contains three short detective stories about Sherlock Holmes. At the beginning of each story, someone approaches Holmes with a problem. Holmes asks various questions, gathers and examines clues, and finally arrives at a solution.

In the first story, Miss Mary Sutherland comes to Holmes’s Baker Street home with a problem about her fiancé, Mr Hosmer Angel. On the day of their wedding Mr Angel disappeared at the church and has not been seen or heard from since.

Holmes discovers that Hosmer Angel is really Mary’s stepfather, Mr Windibank, in disguise. As Hosmer Angel, he pretended to fall in love with Mary so that he could keep Mary’s money while she lived with her mother and stepfather. Mr Windibank admits his crime but Holmes decides not to tell Mary because she still loves Hosmer Angel so much.

In the second story, a university professor, Hilton Soames, asks for Holmes’s help because someone goes into his room and looks at some important exam papers. He finds several clues in his room: a cut on his desk, a broken pencil and some black clay. There are three suspects – the students who live above Mr Soames’s rooms.

Holmes soon knows which student is to blame. He also discovers that someone else has been keeping a secret from Mr Soames: his butler, Bannister. Finally, the student admits that he saw the papers, and explains that he does not want to take the exam after all, so as he has a job in South Africa.

In the final story, a beautiful young woman, Miss Violet Smith, comes to Holmes because a man is following her on a bicycle. Although Miss Smith is engaged, another man, Mr Woodley, wants to marry her. First Dr Watson, then Holmes, go to Farnham, where Miss Smith works and lives.

In the dramatic conclusion to the story, Miss Smith is kidnapped and forced to marry Mr Woodley, the man on the bicycle reveals his true identity and shoots Mr Woodley, and Holmes and Watson arrive just in time to save Miss Smith.

Background and themes

Most of Doyle’s Sherlock Holmes stories are set in London in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Just the name of Sherlock Holmes conjures up a mysterious background of gaslit streets and horse-drawn cabs disappearing into the London mists. But Holmes often travelled to different parts of England, and in these stories we see Holmes in action in a University town (probably Oxford or Cambridge) and in the Surrey countryside, as well as in London.

Money and greed is an important theme in two of these stories. Typically, Doyle wrote about the professional classes (doctors, lawyers, teachers) with whom he was most familiar. This class of people were well educated and hard working. They are usually the trustworthy and honest characters in Doyle’s stories. He also wrote about a new class of people – wealthy businessmen. Some of these people were new to money and wanted to live the easy lives of the upper classes. Both Miss Sutherland (from the first story) and Miss Smith (from the third story) are tricked into or out of marriage by unscrupulous businessmen who are eager to take the women’s money.

Disguise and mistaken identity are important themes in many detective stories, and Doyle led the way for many mystery and detective story writers who followed him. One of Sherlock Holmes’s most famous characteristics is his ability to notice minor details of a person’s appearance and to deduce that person’s character and lifestyle from these details. Sherlock Holmes immediately notices the red marks on Miss Sutherland’s nose and arms (and deduces she is a short-sighted typist). And, in the same story, Holmes is easily able to look behind the most obvious details of appearance (dark glasses and a beard) to recognize the true identity of the man beneath.

Each of these stories has a similar structure: Sherlock Holmes is approached by a stranger with a problem. Holmes carefully and quickly analyses the stranger’s character, asks questions about their problems, and gathers a set of clues. Whilst the reader (and Dr Watson) are led in one direction, the story develops in an unpredictable way and ends with a surprising conclusion. This ‘twist in the tale’ keeps the readers guessing until the last moment and maintains suspense and interest. This structure is typical of Sherlock Holmes stories and has been used by thriller and detective story writers (such as Agatha Christie and John Grisham) ever since.

ACTIVITIES BEFORE READING THE BOOK

1. Ask students to tell you what they know about the time in which Sherlock Holmes stories are set (end of the nineteenth and beginning of the twentieth centuries). Then put the class into groups and give each group a piece of paper. Students should draw a line down the centre of the paper to make two columns. Label the first column ‘1900’ and the second column ‘today’. Give the class ten minutes to write as many differences between these two times as they can think of. Finally, ask the groups to present their lists to the rest of the class.

2. Put students into pairs. Then, each pair chooses a picture from the book and looks at it carefully for three minutes. After three minutes, student A takes the book and asks student B questions about the picture. Student B should answer as many questions as possible without looking at the book.

ACTIVITIES AFTER READING A SECTION

Sherlock Holmes and the Strange Mr Angel

1. Students write a letter from Mary Sutherland’s mother to Mary. She wants to tell her daughter the truth about Mr Windibank and Hosmer Angel. But she doesn’t want to hurt her. Students will need to summarize the story as well as think about the relationships between Mary and her parents.

2. Students work in groups of three. They should look at the picture on page 5 and imagine a conversation between Miss Sutherland, her mother and the cab driver. Each character should ask and answer questions about Hosmer Angel and the journey to church. Where do they think he has gone?

Sherlock Holmes and the Important Exam Paper

1. Students work individually or in pairs. Ask them to rewrite the story from Bannister’s point of view. Ask them to start when Soames returns home and calls Bannister to his room (page 14).

2. Students work individually. They should write a page in Mr Soames’s diary on the night before Holmes solves the problem. Soames knows that one of the students, Gilchrist, Daulat Ras or Miles McLaren has looked at the exam paper. Students should write Soames’s thoughts about each suspect. Which one does he think looked at the exam paper, and why?

Sherlock Holmes and the Dangerous Road

1. Write these characters’ names on the board: Violet Smith, Ralph Smith, Mr Carruthers, Mr Woodley, Cyril, Mr Williamson, Sherlock Holmes, Dr Watson. Put the class into groups and choose a student from the first group to come up and draw a line between any of the characters who are connected. The student should explain the nature of the relationship (e.g., ‘friends’, ‘stepfather’, etc.). Then ask a student from each group in turn to do the same thing until there are no more links.

ACTIVITIES AFTER READING THE BOOK

1. Discussion. Why are Sherlock Holmes stories still popular today, one hundred years after they were written? Prompt students to think about the appeal of the main characters as well as what makes a good detective story.

2. Sherlock Holmes stories often have a ‘twist in the tale’, i.e. an unexpected conclusion based on new evidence near the end of the story. Ask students to write a short, simple story of their own. It does not have to be a detective story but it should include a ‘twist in the tale.’ This exercise can be done in class or as homework.

Word list

It will be useful for your students to know the new words found on the inside back cover of the Reader. They are practised in the ‘Before you read’ sections at the back of the book. (The definitions are based on those in the Longman Active Study Dictionary.)
Student's Activities

ACTIVITIES AFTER READING THE BOOK

1 Who is your favourite character in the book? Who is your least favourite? Write some words and sentences about each character. Why do you like them or not like them?

2 Choose one of the pictures in the book. Write about the picture and try to explain the story. Who are the people in the picture? Where are they? What are they doing? Are they good or bad? What happens next?

3 What do you think about the two women, Miss Smith and Miss Sutherland? Are they like women today? How are they different?
'Just sit down and tell us your story,' said Holmes kindly. 'My name is Helen Stoner,' she began, 'and I live with my stepfather, Dr Grimesby Roylott, near a village in the country. His family was once very rich, but they had no money when my stepfather was born. When we arrived, Helen Stoner showed us the three bedrooms. We saw her room first. Why are they mending your bedroom wall?' asked Holmes.
