Details from the memos also included the number of times that insects were kept in the detainee's cell for long periods, beating and kicking the detainee until he was unable to stand, and using pepper spray and agents of other irritants to induce illness.

"The Guantánamo Bay detention camp has become a symbol of the United States military's war on terrorism, used to house prisoners from around the world, including those who participated in the September 11 attacks. The camp, located in the Guantanamo Bay Naval Base in Cuba, is the largest prison in the world, with more than 730 prisoners held there as of mid-2009. The prisoners are accused of terrorism, and many have been held without charge for years. The U.S. government has argued that it is necessary to keep the camp open to ensure that even our most dedicated enemies are kept off the battlefield for the long haul.

"The United States and its allies have devoted many resources to the war on terrorism, including the construction of the Guantánamo Bay detention camp. The camp is designed to hold prisoners who are deemed too dangerous to be released but who cannot be tried for crimes due to the lack of international legal framework. The prisoners are interrogated and held in conditions that raise concerns about their treatment, including solitary confinement, sensory deprivation, and the use of force.

1. I have spent the past two weeks visiting the United States, at the invitation of the federal government, to look at whether the persistence of extreme poverty in America undermines the enjoyment of human rights by its citizens. In my travels through California, Alabama, Georgia, Puerto Rico, West Virginia, and Washington DC I have spoken with dozens of experts and civil society groups, met with senior state and federal government officials and talked with many people who are homeless or living in deep poverty. I am grateful to the Trump Administration for facilitating my visit and for its c
