The music curriculum in most schools in Wales had been associated with the traditional and ‘art’ musics of Western European culture. Schools were more inclined to teach children vocal, choral and instrumental music that was Germanic rather than African, and French rather than Asian-Indian. This changed markedly in the 1960s and early 70s when the Orff-Schulwerk approach to music education took root in Britain. The method was first developed in the 20s and by the 1950s had established itself in many European countries, especially Austria and Germany. Through a series of books ‘Mu... In each country there are five stages of education: early years, primary, secondary, Further Education (FE) and Higher Education (HE).Â education qualifications (such as A-levels, International Baccalaureate, Scottish Highers, or equivalent qualifications from your country) in related subjects. Find out more at UCAS or ask your chosen university or college. The classic British Music has been a mixture of Ars Nova polyphony of the early stages of music in Europe. Early music forms in Britain included highly distinct music forms such as Contenance Angloise, antiphons, carol, Celtic chant and medieval music. In the 16th century British music was significantly influenced by religious, mainly Catholic, music. In the early era of Baroque, Opera music became the limelight in Britain. The royal court music also played one of the leading roles in British music in the 17th century. So it integrated to the wider European music culture. Between the Medieval
