Social Credit and the Federal Power in Canada. Origins and founding: 1935–1963. The Canadian social credit movement was largely an outgrowth of the Alberta Social Credit Party, and the Social Credit Party of Canada was strongest in Alberta during this period. In 1932, Baptist evangelist William Aberhart used his radio program to preach the values of social credit throughout the province. [4] He added a heavy dose of fundamentalist Christianity to C. H. Douglas’s monetary theories; as a result, the social credit movement in Canada has had a strong social conservative t
