The federal government taxes not only investment income – dividends, interest, rent on real estate, etc. – but also realized capital gains. The taxman is smart, too; investors cannot escape by investing indirectly through mutual funds, exchange-traded funds, REITs or limited partnerships. That’s why shareholders get a break – a preferential tax rate of 15% on “qualified dividends” if the company is domiciled in the U.S. or in a country that has a double-taxation treaty with the U.S. acceptable to the IRS. Non-qualified dividends paid by other foreign companies or entities that receive non-qualified income (a dividend paid from interest on bonds held by a mutual fund, for example) are taxed at regular income tax rates, which are typically higher.
