I conclude that less than five percent of the population is even subject to persuasion by logic and less than two percent are reliably capable of being persuaded by it. Yes, the rhetoric/social punishment comes into play not necessarily in the act of noticing disparities -- indeed, the whole of the BLM movement is predicated on this idea -- but rather in insinuating that the disparity may be caused by an intrinsic racial factor. Little has changed, despite the rhetoric about reform, official rhetoric on the virtues of large families.
