Male ballet dancers are blessed with strong legs that enable them to rise off the dance floor. This creates a surprising flying effect. Apart from this their physical anatomy helps them turn several times. Men have triangle shaped back which helps them turn or spin like a top.

The core technique of ballet is the same for both. In general, the only difference between the way a male dancer and a female dancer execute the same move will be that men dance with slightly straighter, stiffer arms and women may add more épaulement (leaning or twisting of the torso). On stage, traditionally men are expected to perform bigger jumps and more turns, while women dance en pointe. But that's a question of choreography more than technique.
