In the interplay between the school culture and the change process, Fullan (2001) has demonstrated a change process which consists of a series of three overlapping phases namely initiation, implementation and institutionalization. During initiation phase, a leader decides to embark on an innovation and develops a commitment towards the process (Hargreaves, Lieberman, &Fullan, 2010). Additionally, continuous monitoring of progress and overcoming of problems is central for successful implementation (Deal & Peterson, 2009). In institutionalization phase, the innovation stops being regarded as something new and becomes part of the school’s usual way of doing things (Fullan, 2001).
